

 PLEASE READ, I HAVE A SUGGESTION *****

I am strongly against the FCC considering overturning the NJ Do-Not-Call list. I finally have peace and quit from unwanted phone calls. I understand that NJ regulations are more stricter then the Federal, however they had the insight to take it a step further. Companies who want to have conduct with people who they have done business with in the last 18 months are Credit Card Companies who assumed contact is wanted. I don't want insurance, special deals, magazines or any other products from them. I didn't authorize it to begin with. They can mail me the info as is the past, and I will make the decision whether to contact them or not. But that decision should be my choice, not theirs. Just because we purchased one product from them, does not give them the authorization to contact us for every product they provided in the past, currently or in the future. If we were, we would have purchased them already.

 My Suggestion *****

If this portion of the regulation is so bothersome, why not make an expiration date for the current list, and upon renewal, have the people who do not want to be called select an option on whether they would like contact from companies who they have had dealings with in the past. That gives us a choice, and leaves the decision in our hands, as it should be. However, I do guarantee that no one will want the contact. But at least you can ask the question.

Thank you,
